Cranfield University defines plagiarism as follows:

Plagiarism is the use, without acknowledgement, of the intellectual work of other people, and the act of representing the ideas or discoveries of others as one's own in any work submitted for assessment or presented for publication. To copy sentences, phrases or even striking expressions without acknowledgement of the source (either by inadequate citation or failure to indicate verbatim quotations) is plagiarism; to paraphrase without acknowledgement is also plagiarism.

- that the work contained in the attached report is all my own work except where it has been referenced accordingly
- all electronic and hard copy versions of my reports are identical
